PinnacleAIS Begins Corporate Wide Mechanical Integrity Implementation for Potash and Phosphate Mining Giant, Mosaic Corporation

PinnacleAIS recently announced that it has started a 12 month project with Mosaic, a phosphate and potash mining giant, to implement state of the art mechanical integrity programs at three of the company's mining facilities. The New Wales site, near Tampa, Florida, and two Esterhazy sites, near Regina, Saskatchewan, are expected to be the first stepping stone to fourteen additional sites over the next four years.

Over the past year, Mosaic has made substantial investments to gain an understanding of their corporate wide mechanical integrity program. The understanding has led to an aggressive effort to implement state of the art mechanical integrity systems across all mining facilities. This effort aims at preventing reliability related incidents, optimizing inspection resources, and keeping in stride with external and internal corporate compliance. Ryan Sitton, Pinnacle's CEO, commented, "The initiative of companies to standardize programs across multiple sites is reflecting an inherent change in reliability strategy. By partnering with Pinnacle, Mosaic is providing itself a powerful tool to identify and react to risk at asset, facility, and corporate levels. Pinnacle is eager to work with Mosaic, as this effort is not only revolutionary within Mosaic, but also within the mining and reliability industries on the whole."
